Cobalt and Silverpeak have joined forces to create a leading independent investment bank providing advice on M&A and financing transactions in the technology sector

London, December 2016 - Jean-Michel Deligny, Paddy MccGwire and Pietro Strada have combined the teams of their respective firms to create a broader and stronger organisation that can provide an even better service to its clients in the technology sector.

Silverpeak advises innovative, fast-growing technology companies with deep domain expertise in Internet & Digital Media, Enterprise Software/SaaS, Business Services, Enabling Technologies and Healthtech.

Commenting on the merger, Pietro Strada, said "Paddy brings a wealth of relationships, knowledge and experience in technology M&A which will significantly broaden Silverpeak's advisory capabilities."

Paddy MccGwire added "I've known Jean-Michel and Pietro whilst building Cobalt over the last 20 years. We bring together complementary networks and sector knowledge. Combined we have a truly global network to deliver outstanding outcomes to our clients."

Recent transactions include advising Octopus, the largest institutional investor, on the sale of Magic Pony to Twitter.

Silverpeak has become a member of Globalscope, the international M&A advisor with people on the ground in 41 countries across every continent which Paddy helped co-found.

The merged business will continue under the Silverpeak brand name.

About Silverpeak

Silverpeak is an independent investment bank providing advice on M&A and financing transactions in the technology sector.

It serves the advisory needs of businesses operating in the technology sector, particularly companies at growth stage, both public and private, financial sponsors (typically private equity and venture funds) and corporates seeking to grow their business via investment or acquisitions, or manage their activity portfolio through spin-offs or divestitures.

Silverpeak typically works on M&A transactions, both selling & buying and larger financings involving international investors.
